

Transcript for Podcast Draft #3

Opening sound: Enormous prison door unlocking, opening, and being re-locked upon closure.

Next sound: DJ Spooky's "Nocture," eerie music.

Voiceover: Hello guys and ghouls, this is Sabrina Meridian. Welcome to Weird Washington, a new podcast where we look at the strangest things that have occurred in Washington state.

Outro: More "Nocture."

Next sound: Suspenseful music.

Voiceover: Tonight on Weird Washington we head out West to the peninsula, to the small town of Ocean Shores, clocking in at roughly 6000 people.

Interrupting sound: Ocean wave rising and falling.

Next sound: Return of suspenseful music for 2-3 seconds. Then silence.

Voiceover Con't: The tide is high, but before moving on, we would like to acknowledge that long before white people*, like Captain Robert Gray, sailed to this region, the Chinook, Chehalis, and Quinault tribes were using this Ocean Shores land.*

*Correction: white colonists

Correction: the Chinook, Chehalis, and Quinault Nations are the original stewards of this land.

Next sound: Return of suspenseful music for 2-3 seconds, then ends.

Voiceover con't: However, on this October weekend in Ocean Shores, most of the town's residents and tourists (jaunty Irish reel begins to play) are focused on the annual Celtic Music Festival, rather than on the region's diverse histories.

original, diverse

Last sound: Irish reel continues to play until fading out.

New sound: Jaunty Irish reel.
