

Japanese to Get Diplomas by Mail

Evacuated Japanese students, who were to receive their diplomas at the University's Commencement exercises June 13, will get them by mail after the University is sure of their whereabouts, the office of Dr. L. P. Sieg, president, said today. They may not be received until some time after the end of the University term.

There are less than 20 Japanese graduating seniors, the office said. Some had completed their work and others made arrangements with heads of their departments to complete it by correspondence, and until all grades are received the University does not know the exact number of those who will receive diplomas.
